Introduction:

To become licensed as a dentist in the U.S it requires a specific process. While you are pursuing your long-term goal of licensing as a D.D.S. or D.M.D., you may want to consider looking for work in lower-level dentistry-related roles. There are advantages to working in lower-level dentistry while you are pursuing your licensure:

- Provide relevant and valuable U.S. experience in the dental/healthcare industry
- Establish professional contacts and networks
- Provide real world insight and access to professionals to benefit your preparation and study for DDS/DMD licensure
- A chance to adapt to the US healthcare system and workplace culture in a lower-pressure environment

Some alternative dental careers that do not require D.D.S or D.M.D licensure, but are directly related to practicing dentistry include:

- Academics (dental school faculty and administration)
- Research and publications
- Industry (dental product development, marketing, sales)
- Public health (water fluoridation)
- Organized Dentistry (dental associations and societies)

Below is a list of specific job titles.
